

Telehealth Services

Connecting injured workers with quality doctors— anytime, almost anywhere

Getting injured workers the care they need the moment they need it can be challenging. Not enough doctors. Too long commutes. Scheduling conflicts. These can all hinder timely medical-care delivery. Telehealth services can help. Telehealth is a great option in lieu of in-person medical visits. It uses technology to securely connect injured workers and experienced physicians from any internet-connected device, often within 30-60 minutes. State Fund embraced telehealth technology to help address doctor shortages in parts of the state. Today more and more people choose it for its effectiveness and convenience, wherever they live.

Telehealth Advantages:

- Telehealth helps manage medical costs overall.
- It works well for triaging injured workers to determine the type of care they need.
- It also works for providing ongoing care to monitor recovery from work injuries or illnesses.
- It enables injured workers to schedule and obtain services outside normal business hours.
- Younger workers prefer using technology for services such as telehealth.
